URBAN CODES OF NATURE

For the past few years, the city of Berlin has been working on a project called "Urban Codes of Nature". This project is a collaboration between the city and various stakeholders, including architects, landscape architects, and urban planners. The goal is to create a set of guidelines that will help to integrate nature into the urban environment in a way that is both aesthetically pleasing and ecologically beneficial.

The project is based on the idea that nature is an essential part of the urban environment and that it should be treated as a resource that can be used to improve the quality of life in cities. The guidelines focus on several key areas, including the use of green roofs, green walls, and permeable pavements. They also address the importance of creating green spaces and corridors that can provide habitat for urban wildlife.

The project is currently in the final stages of development and is expected to be implemented in the coming years. It is hoped that the "Urban Codes of Nature" will help to create a more sustainable and livable city for all.
